Hi Alex:

Thanks for your email. (Please copy Daphna on all correspondence).

As we indicated over the phone, we cannot agree to your proposal. Specifically, we will not agree to withdraw our request for a preliminary injunction, nor can we agree that, given the parties' current respective positions, the deadlines for emergency discovery are no longer necessary. We propose that the parties agree to the P.I. on consent, without prejudice to going back to the Court should facts change that require a modification or a lifting of the stay. We are also willing to enter into a proposed expedited discovery schedule as you request. The attached proposal reflects the foregoing.

As stated above, since we do not have agreement, please propose a time to meet and confer on our document requests. We are willing to work with you of course but given the tight deadline of next Thursday, we need the documents by the deadline.

Thanks,

Jorge

Hi Jorge and Kevin – as a follow up to our conversations this week, I'm attaching a draft stipulation and proposed order through which Telegram agrees not to offer, sell or distribute any Grams and will preserve relevant documents. We believe this agreement achieves every objective of the SEC's requested preliminary injunction, while preserving the status quo and all parties' rights without asking the Court to engage on the merits at this premature juncture. We hope that the SEC will reconsider its insistence that Defendants consent to entry of a preliminary injunction, which is obviated by the proposed agreement. We're also happy to discuss if you have any proposed edits to the language of the stipulation.

Separately, we'll be sending you later today responses and objections to the SEC's sixteen document requests dated October 11, 2019. We're available to meet and confer regarding these requests, which, as you know, implicate significant data privacy issues, among others. In light of Telegram's commitment not to offer, sell or distribute Grams and the parties' agreement to work together to set an expedited schedule in this matter, please confirm the SEC's agreement that the deadlines for emergency discovery are no longer necessary as we work through these issues.

Thank you, Alex
